

International PhD Program – call for applications

VACANCIES

6 Doctoral Research Positions in Law, Ethics and Economics for Sustainable Development (LEES)

The Universities of Milan, Rijeka and Maastricht are seeking six outstanding and committed students to carry out a three-year multidisciplinary research project, based at more than one participating university (see HERE the call for application and the course website).

The three universities are launching LEES, a new doctoral programme in International and Public Law, Ethics and Economics for Sustainable Development. With courses, seminars and scientific research activities entirely in English, it addresses the complexities involved in sustainable development, and uses an innovative multidisciplinary approach that combines the contributions of law, ethics, and economics.

The programme is managed by a highly qualified international doctoral board and supervised by an international scientific council composed by top scholars in the relevant fields of law ethics and economics (see attachment), which will advise the board on the development of research lines and the programme of the yearly international workshops and summer schools.

The first year of the programme will be based in Milan, where the PhD students will attend courses and seminars, and participate in the activities and events of the academic community of the Department. The second and third years will mainly be dedicated to students' own personal research projects and to participating in the large-scale joint project by working with one of our partner universities, and with the cooperation of their advisors. To enable their participation in the joint project, students will have access to additional funding and will have the opportunity to carry out part of their research either in one of the other leading universities – Rijeka or Maastricht – or in another partner university (see full list attached) depending on the project and the agreements which will be set up. Researchers who choose to work with one of the partner universities will receive, in addition to the joint degree from the three leading universities, a degree from the applicable partner university, as well.

The candidates must be prepared to be both visionary and ambitious, in order to alter the current, unsatisfactory trajectory of development by taking intellectual risks. They must be devoted to social justice and committed to enhancing the quality of research in one or more of the Ph.D. research fields, as well as open to and interested in using research methodologies in different fields (Law, Ethics, and Economics). Candidates must have the preparation and the ability to pursue innovative results at the frontiers of research, where unsolved problems call for interdisciplinary approaches and contributions, and submit a project in line with at least one of the many proposed lines of research.

LEES lines of research focus on, in particular: re-thinking legal, ethical, and economic approaches to sustainability; social justice and theories of justice; environmental issues; public options for sustainable development; governance of the common sphere; corporate social responsibility; innovation technologies; and human rights (FULL LIST HERE).

If you are interested, please submit your application no later than 14 October 2019 through the University of Milan submission system, (see HERE the call for application containing all the requirements and information to submit your application).

This programme is for you if you:

- have at least five previous years of academic background in one of the Ph.D. disciplines (Law; Economics; Ethics; Political theory and sciences; Environmental and sustainability sciences; Philosophy);
- are willing to change the current, unsatisfactory trajectories of development;
- are sensitive to social justice;
- are open to and interested in using research methodologies in different fields;
- are prepared to work in different environments;
- are proficient in English;
- have very good scientific writing and communication skills.

We offer:

- a PhD programme earning a joint degree in at least three different countries;
- a list of partner universities that will allow you to carry out fully multidisciplinary and international research;
- an extensive board of experts standing by to assist you in your research;
- a PhD scholarship which includes a monthly gross salary of 1365,50 €, for 3 years;
- additional funds to facilitate your mobility;
- a full-time Ph.D. programme without any teaching duties;
- our beautiful academic campus located in the heart of downtown Milan;
- interaction with top scholars members of the international scientific council and with the excellent faculty and staff of our innovative LLM Programme in Sustainable Development, a diverse academic community that brings together minds from 10 different countries;
- participation in a large-scale research project with the potential to have wide-ranging implications for the sustainability of future international development.

Important dates:

Deadline for applications: 14 October 2019

A first ranking list will be published by 22 October 2019.

Interviews will start on 24 October 2019.

Starting date: 4 November 2019

For additional information you may contact:

- for academic queries, the Head of the Programme, Professor Lorenzo Sacconi: lorenzo.sacconi@unimi.it
- for administrative questions: lees@unimi.it